Is a $1,000 Ice Cream Sundae Worth It? Yes, If It's the Mauboussin Mega Sundae at NYC's Bagatelle

We've all heard of gimmicky, super-priced foods before. A black truffle burger, a caviar pizza, a 14-karat gold this or that. But this might well be the first time that a special menu item with a very special (expensive) price tag is actually worth it. Because this time, it combines my two most favorite things on earth: dessert and jewelry.

Bagatelle is one of those places you go to have day parties at brunch, where models dance on tables. At first, when I saw they were serving a $1,000 ice cream sundae, I was like, whatever. But then I saw what's actually in it:

- homemade vanilla ice cream
- chocolate truffles
- homemade French macaroons
- Dom Perignon Rosé sorbet with gold leaves
- chocolate vodka sauce
- gilded brownies
- fresh whipped cream
- AN EXCLUSIVE MAUBOUSSIN RING

To be fair, the ring is served on the side. But, like, it comes with a ring! Mauboussin designed this black steel and white gold ring as an exclusive offering to Bagatelle, based on its Moi Non Plus, Toi Non plus collection (here's another version available on their website).

Starting May 1, you can book a table at Bagatelle and order this special sundae for yourself. The black steel and white gold ring is a really fun statement piece for a girl, but it would make the perfect engagement ring for a guy (if anyone is looking for a very fun, very NYC way to propose in a grand fashion).

What do you think? Would you splurge on this sundae to share with a group of friends (or a date) knowing that you're going home with a Mauboussin ring? I totally would do this for a birthday (as in, mine). Treat yourself!
